*The difference between short- and long-term tests: If you are just doing your first test, EPA recommends that you do a short-term test (2 to 6 days). This is to quickly tell you whether or not you have cause for concern. If the test comes back 4 piC/L or higher, it is recommended that you either run a second short-term test and average the two results, or run a long-term test (more than 90 days). The short-term test gives a "snap shot" of the current radon level. The long-term test gives a more accurate average of radon exposure. There is more detailed information on the KSU NRPS website at http://www.sosradon.org.
